Category:Virtual singersUltrastructure of cultured rat parietal pituitary cells and cells from the pars distalis of adult and prepubertal rats treated with luteinizing hormone releasing hormone. The ultrastructure of cultured rat parietal pituitary cells and cells from the pars distalis of adult and prepubertal rats treated with luteinizing hormone-releasing hormone (LHRH) has been examined. The culture system, which includes an assay for secreted progesterone, is used for comparing the effects of various treatments on gonadotrophs. The in vitro treatment with LHRH (1.0 microM), after 72 hr, resulted in a very small number of gonadotrophs which exhibited a slight increase in cytoplasmic volume and a dramatic increase in secretory granules. In the isolated pars distalis cells of both adult and prepubertal rats treated with LHRH there were fewer gonadotrophs and they were of smaller size than those of controls. When observed by electron microscopy, the cells of both groups appeared morphologically normal with the exception of the increase in secretory granules. The pars distalis cells from the prepubertal rats treated with LHRH also had smaller, more dense nuclei with a prominent nucleolus than the adult controls. There was a smaller proportion of cells with extensive Golgi complexes in the prepubertal cells 2d92ce491b
