. The burden of co-morbidities in inflammatory bowel disease: a comparison of disease onset and time to diagnosis in UC and CD. The aim of this study was to assess the nature and the prevalence of co-morbidities in inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) patients compared with matched controls. An Australian case-control study, using the largest nationwide administrative database of pathology, was conducted in patients with IBD between July 1997 and December 2002. Patients with Crohn's disease (CD) or ulcerative colitis (UC) who received a primary diagnosis of IBD at any time between 1994 and 2002 were identified. The study group included cases diagnosed between 1994 and 1999 (CD, n = 1,347; UC, n = 3,931), and the control group consisted of randomly selected individuals matched for age, sex and area of residence. A patient was assigned a co-morbidity at the time of IBD diagnosis, and co-morbidities were compared between cases and controls using conditional logistic regression. Of all patients with CD, 11.3% had rheumatoid arthritis (RA), 4.7% had cystic fibrosis, 10.8% had asthma, 5.6% had diabetes mellitus and 0.9% had AIDS. In comparison to matched controls, cases of CD had a significantly greater likelihood of comorbidities (odds ratio [OR] 1.25, 95% confidence interval [CI] 1.04-1.48) compared with RA, diabetes mellitus, cystic fibrosis and AIDS (OR 1.46, 95% CI 1.18-1.83). The age at diagnosis of CD patients with co-morbidities was significantly older than for cases without co-morbidities (44.8 vs. 37.1 years, respectively; P < .001).
