Q: Strange behaviour of li tag - long text This is strange. I have a list and I want to make it look pretty by putting a lot of text inside. The problem is that if there is a lot of text, when the text is too long the li tag wraps it and the last word is wrapped. You can see it here: This is very strange behaviour for me, because I thought that it's the list that wraps the text. The text of course is very long, so it wraps around, but shouldn't it wrap around the bullet? A: When the width of the list is wider than the browser window, the first line of text will go to the left of the list. This is how browsers deal with long lines. Your best option is to use CSS to display the text vertically: `.list li { display:inline-block; line-height: 25px; padding-left: 5px; }` Employment Opportunities

Movies.avi In recent years, home networks have been developed, in which a wide variety of communication apparatuses are connected to a single home network. For example, in a home network which includes a plurality of wireless communication apparatuses such as wireless LAN (Local Area Network) base stations, wireless access points and smart devices and which communicates with each other, there is a technology of providing data communication services to a plurality of home devices connected to the home network. In such a home network, a transmitting apparatus such as a wireless access point which is not a service provider transmits service identification information of the transmitting apparatus, and a receiving apparatus such as a wireless LAN terminal or a smart device which is a service provider receives the service identification information and provides data communication services (refer to, for example, Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 2012-118922). However, since only a single service provider can perform communication services on a home network, a home device such as a wireless LAN terminal or a smart device which is not the service provider cannot perform data communication services. Accordingly, there is a need for a technique for allowing a home device which is not a service provider to use a home network which includes a service provider.

Mississippi State acquires commitment from 6-foot-3, 230-pound Thomas Wayne Thomas Wayne | 2019 Class | 6-foot-3, 230-pound defensive tackle Thomas Wayne commits to Mississippi State Thomas Wayne (6-foot-3, 230 pounds) of Hebron (Miss.) Hebron Academy is headed to Starkville, Mississippi State. The MSU offensive line coach will be his coach. Wayne is currently in the 2019 class. "Thomas Wayne is a highly skilled and mature young man who is an excellent fit for our program," MSU coach Joe Moorhead said. "We were pleased to receive Thomas Wayne's verbal commitment during our summer recruiting visit to Starkville and look forward to his continued development." Thomas Wayne is the son of former NFL players Thomas Wayne Sr. and Isabell Edwards and the grandson of former NFL standout linebacker, Mike Strahan. His parents attended Mississippi State while he was growing up. "Mississippi State is one of the most prestigious football programs in the nation and I am excited to play for coach Moorhead and the Bulldogs," Thomas Wayne said. "I am committed
