Not really. The plans we make for our lives have to be flexible enough to adapt to the future as it happens. That's why it's important to be honest with ourselves and ask what we want, what we really want, and how much we're willing to work for it. But to really get a realistic sense of what's to come, we'll have to put some thought into what we want to achieve and who we want to surround ourselves with. Here are some things we'll have to think about moving forward, based on some pretty exciting developments that are likely to come in the next 12 months: Race for the White House Looking at the 2016 presidential election, it's important to know that there are two distinct camps, and we need to know where we're going to camp as soon as possible. Most of the Republicans are behind the former Texas Governor Rick Perry, but on the other side, there's Donald Trump, who is having the most exciting start to a presidential campaign since 1972. If you know where you stand, you can plan your voting strategy accordingly. The Democrats are having a bit more of a shakeup as well, with Hillary Clinton leading Bernie Sanders in the polls. But with a very large field of candidates, there's no way of knowing which of them will have the nomination. With all this uncertainty, it's important to start planning what you're going to do when the big day comes
