BOSTON — Police were searching for a missing Boston family as they mourn the loss of a 20-month-old child found unresponsive in their bathtub. Rocco Gaudio, 20, and his family were walking to pick up dinner at O’Connell’s restaurant in downtown Boston around 10:30 p.m. Wednesday when they were met by police officers. “We were walking from South Station to O’Connell’s at the last minute,” said Gaudio’s wife, Camila de Nester. “We saw police right there with the lights. They were yelling at us ‘Stop! Stop!’ and the police officer ran up and told us to put our hands up and then arrested my husband.” The child was pronounced dead at the scene. The Gaudio family told WBZ they do not know the boy’s identity, but have named him Rocco Gian Gaudio. “My first thought was he’s in trouble, because my husband has a criminal record. But what was crazy to me was when he asked my husband, ‘Why did they arrest you?’ and my husband is telling him, ‘I don’t know.’ My husband said he told him, ‘I didn’t do anything,’” said de Nester. Police said the family was known to them and was supposed to meet up with them at O’Connell’s. Officers said the boy was in the bathtub and unresponsive when officers arrived. “We think we’re going to have to make decisions soon about what happens next,” said de Nester. “We’re not sure what’s going to happen to us now.” De Nester says the family had been planning to celebrate Rocco’s birthday Friday. “He was such a great kid,” de Nester said. “You know, he loved to laugh, he loved to dance, he loved everything.

MumbaiRadioimmunosintigraphy of colorectal cancer: experience in Japan.
To study the results of radioimmunosintigraphy in the diagnosis of colorectal cancer, 80 patients with 92 colorectal cancer lesions were studied. Among the patients with colonic lesions, 15 were diagnosed as having colorectal cancer by colonoscopic biopsy. In addition,

16 patients with colonic diseases other than colorectal cancer were studied for comparison. The results of radioimmunoscinigraphy for the diagnosis of colonic cancer were excellent in eight (53%) of the 15 patients, very good in four (27%) of the 15 patients, and good in three (20%) of the 15 patients. The false-negative rate was 20%. In the comparison group, excellent results were found in two (13%) of the 16 patients, very good results in five (31%) of the 16 patients, good results in five (31%) of the 16 patients, and poor results in four (25%) of the 16 patients. In conclusion, the false-negative rate of radioimmunosciintigraphy was high, and we believe that this technique is not practical for the diagnosis of colorectal cancer. Now the truth is out in the open. Thanks to a superb team of Boston University researchers, we have a new way of looking at the way we think. The breakthrough is the breakthrough we've been waiting for. It is a door that is now open that we can begin to walk through. One of the most poignant insights about the way we think, given the 2d92ce491b
