The scribe takes a bound shekel, which is a strip of gold about the width of a finger, and writes the name of a town on it, and it is placed in the central section of the synagogue, and thus it is used as a seal for the meeting. The first community in Israel took up this custom when it was discovered that no one could be found to supervise the collection of the people's fines and taxes. Jesus and the Woman Caught in Adultery (27a) is a painting by Lorenzo Lotto, attributed to circa 1515. The painting depicts Jesus Christ delivering the woman from the punishment for adultery, according to the Pharisees. This is part of a collection of icons created by Catholic missionary Saint Frances Xavier Cabrini, who is famous for building a home and school in Japan for the poor and uneducated. Catholic Encyclopedia: Japan The state called Japan is located in the northern half of the Pacific Ocean, north of China and Korea. Its inhabitants are Japanese or Ainu, or both. Most of them are descendants of the original inhabitants of Japan, whom most people consider to be Asian. The area now called Japan is situated in a volcanic arc that runs through a long land-bridge, known as the Pacific, which connects Asia to North America. The country has a rich and long tradition of painting, especially on paper, and its art treasures are now being discovered by the world at large. The painters of the Nara Period (645-794) were the first Japanese painters who were influenced by the art of the Tang Dynasty in China. The monks of the early Kamakura period (1186-1336) were master artisans. Early in the Christian Era Japanese painting developed under the influence of the foreign Christians, especially those from Syria and Persia, but it still remained mainly Buddhist in its content and design. The emergence of a national style called Nihonga began at the end of the 18th century, under the influence of Jesuit missionary painting, and soon became a national religion. Nihonga means the way of the Japanese, and is usually taken to refer to the religious art of the Japanese, which is quite different from that of the West. The Japanese artist Kawamura Kigin has said that if there is a divine power, it is the love of a Japanese painter. A genuine Japanese artist is not aware of the changes of his times, but often lives in the atmosphere
