I would like to write a program to make my website look better. I would like to read text from an unknown-width font and display it to a webpage. A: You will need to use a font that contains support for font fallback, i.e. multiple font names for the same character. The font used for testing is "Courier New" in the Windows world (perhaps "Times New Roman" if you are on Linux). public class TestFont { public static void main(String[] args) { // the font we will be using Font f = new Font(Font.MONOSPACED, Font.PLAIN, 24); // we will test the default font, the "Times" font, and the // "Courier New" font TextArea textArea = new TextArea(6, 30); // each of these fonts has a different number of widths per // character for (int i = 0; i
