A modern screensaver makes it appear more productive and can be a fun way to show your personal style. The screensaver generally resides on the desktop of your computer, meaning that all aspects of the image are visible at all times. Screensavers can run continuously, or you can pause them and return to them at any time. You can also close your computer and come back to it at any time to view the screensaver. With the Vista release of Windows, the screensaver functionality was split into two: those with and those without an active mouse pointer. In addition, Vista introduced the concept of Instant-On and while many machines now utilize the feature, it is not required and you can easily disable it. Screensavers without an active mouse pointer Microsoft offers a wide variety of free screensavers, many of which are designed to work specifically with Windows Vista. These screensavers are not as feature-rich as the expensive premium screensavers, however, many of the Windows Vista-specific features can be enabled or disabled. The default screensaver that is installed with Vista is called "Windows Vista Creative," and is designed to be simple and easy to use. You can install this screensaver as your new default, and you can make any changes you want to the screensaver, such as disabling the blinking cursor or changing the background image. In addition, you can also turn the screensaver on or off at any time. The screen savers are listed in a set of folders on the hard disk drive of your computer. To change the screensaver, right click on the desktop, and select the "Screen Saver Settings" option from the menu. Select a different screensaver from the list of folders. If you are interested in the screensavers offered by Microsoft, download the "Microsoft screen saver gallery." It contains a wide variety of options from which to choose. Screensavers with an active mouse pointer Vista introduced a new way of using the screensaver functionality. Now, Windows Vista screensavers with an active mouse pointer are activated by holding down the SHIFT key and clicking
