Episode Info: Comedian and actor Rob Lowe joins Dan Amira and Eric Nathanson to discuss his latest book, "Plastic: A Toxic Love Story," a memoir in which he writes about his struggles with plastic surgery, plastic addiction, and its effects. Lowe talks about growing up with a beautiful family and having an adoring mother and sister, learning that his mother died of alcoholism when he was 10 and struggling with his father's drug addiction and alcoholism. In the book's most dramatic and revealing moment, Lowe describes how he began undergoing an escalating series of plastic surgeries, ultimately transforming himself into a dangerously unattainable god. Lowe admits that he wrestled with and eventually rejected his surgically enhanced body, eventually becoming a spokesman against cosmetic surgery. While Lowe talks about the beauty industry, his various plastic surgeries and the damage they've done to him and others, he also delves deeply into his sexuality and the subject of coming out, coming to terms with his father and mother's death, and the impact of his childhood and adolescence on his adult life. Lowe also touches on his unique friendship with Donald Trump, and how Trump has influenced his life and career.
