I have some files that has to be kept inside a folder in php, but I don't want a normal user to be able to edit/modify files of that folder. For example, if a user uploads a file by using the following code, if (!(move_uploaded_file($tempFile, 'uploads/'. $img_name))) { $output['error'] = $tempFile; } How can I protect the files being uploaded by users? A: you should make use of the File Info API. It will allow your users to upload the file without having to upload it (since the clientside validation is done by the browser). Edit: It will also give your users the opportunity to edit the file. this is a nice feature on it's own. If you wish to protect your files from being edited, you should really let your users edit your files. There are a lot of security risks such as: the person who edited the file could have sent the file along with a virus. the person who edited the file might have saved it to other locations. the person who edited the file could have inserted in into his directory. On the other hand, if you deny the users the possibility to edit the file, you will have to either not let them upload the file (which is probably not acceptable) let them upload the file but force them to save it to a specific location let them upload the file but deny them the right to edit it By using the File Info API, you avoid option 2 and at the same time enable the possibility to edit the file.
