Virtual disk is a bit like a real disk, which you can open and read/write with your program, but is not a real disk, your normal disk program won't recognize it. As long as you know the password to open this virtual disk, you can browse it just like any other disk. It's possible to mount the virtual disk as a real disk, but you won't have any normal privilege to that disk, no ability to read/write/delete to it. Virtual disk is based on XOR encryption. Every time you write something to it, it XORs everything you write with a random bit string, and a different bit string is generated for every write. To decrypt anything you write, you just XOR it with the password. This can be use to create a file full of your personal info, and you can always change the password and delete the encrypted file, you won't be able to open it anymore. Only when you input the correct password, the file will decrypt and be displayed to you. CryptDisk.4h Manager is a encryption utility based on a virtual disk.
