The Core of the Decision-Making Game In every decision the player must take an action, or series of actions, at any given time. The core of the decision-making is a three second decision-making cycle, with the final decision based on the player's comfort with their chosen option at the time of decision. This three second decision-making cycle is then done in real time as the ball is in play. The pitch presentation engine is a core component of the decision-making process and is important as it drives everything about how the game is played. The pitch presentation engine has two main aspects - the pitch presentation and the ball physics. The Pitch Presentation The Pitch Presentation engine is used to create the spectacle of the pitch in a game that truly feels like you are playing a high quality football match. The presentation of the pitch is comprised of a combination of visuals, gameplay and audio. The pitch, the ball, the corners of the pitch and the players are all animated. The number of animations per second are equivalent to the number of animations that would be displayed in a high quality TV match. The ball physics, animation, audio and visuals all interact with each other dynamically. The player's ball speed and dribble speed affect the visuals to give the illusion of speed that can rival a real-life match. The additional logic at the core of the decision-making system reinforces this information. The core pitch presentation logic and physics deliver gameplay that is reliable and tactically intuitive. The game will have all the key elements to produce a fluid, tactical and played football match. The Ball Physics The ball physics are the 'core' of the decision-making game. They create the ability for the player to move and dribble the ball as naturally and in a similar way to a real-life player. The handling model is based on the default player model - the Y-Turn. The Y-Turn is the primary way to start, turn and pass the ball and is a key part of the experience of playing FIFA 22 as it is used in the 'Legacy System' and 'Lean System.' The Y-Turn model has been updated, improved and is more robust than the default in FIFA 19. Goalkeepers Goalkeepers have the best lateral ball control in the game and feel very natural in relation to other players.
