“FIFA 22 has the most innovations in its core gameplay to date,” said Peter Riech, Managing Director of EA SPORTS. “With HyperMotion Technology, we are able to focus on capturing what happens in the most realistic way possible at each moment in a match, providing every player a true on-pitch experience.” “We’ve worked closely with EA SPORTS to create a brand-new motion capture system that combines the best tools of its kind to capture all the intricate and dynamic nature of the game in a totally unique way,” said Rene Genuist, President of visual real-time technology at Improbable. “The resulting improvements give the players and fans new aspects to experience in a sport that is as close to the real thing as any game has ever been.” In FIFA 22, HyperMotion technology has been embedded directly into the game engine. It provides the foundation for all the game’s gameplay innovations and data for the player models and AI elements across all game modes. “FIFA is one of the best sports games in the world, and now using “HyperMotion” technology our players will be able to feel like they’re immersed in the action as never before,” said FIFA’s Executive Producer, Matt Prior. “Using ‘HyperMotion’ technology brings the movement and game play of FIFA to another level, making every moment feel like they’re happening in reality.” New approaches to connection and connectivity The movement of players is the key factor in the dynamics of the game. In FIFA 22, EA SPORTS has applied its revolutionary “Perception” technology to make players seem completely real. This improves the realism of player movement and movement patterns and allows them to look more realistic as they respond to what their teammates do. In addition, a completely new system, based on “Perception,” called “Connection,” focuses on improving the connection between players. Connection is required to maintain fluidity during realistic matches that emphasize continuous action with long-distance runs. This allows for more realistic and appealing movement of players. FIFA 22 also introduces new controls that keep players in the right places at all times and give full control to the players, enabling them to engage in the action at all stages of play. “At FIFA, we believe in what’s real
