a criminal complaint in advance of an arrest. Id. at 578, 641 A.2d 734. In upholding the constitutionality of the statute, we concluded that the statute did not require a showing that the information be presented before or at the time of arrest. Id. at 581, 641 A.2d 734. Instead, the statute prohibited the release of the information without a court order, regardless of when it was released. Thus, we noted that the statutory provision actually furthered the statute's purpose of eliminating the potential for police leaks by requiring the release of information to be supervised by a court in advance of an arrest. Id. at 583, 641 A.2d 734. We also noted that the provision did not render the statute too imprecise because there was a specific procedure for the review of information that had been released. Id. at 584, 641 A.2d 734. In sum, we held that the statute was constitutional because the statute's privacy protection outweighed the State's interest in arresting an alleged offender. Id. at 586-87, 641 A.2d 734. Turning to the case at hand, we observe that, as in Konopka, the PSA prohibited the release of the identity of arrestees without a court order, regardless of when the arrest was reported. Thus, the PSA did not require a showing that the information was given before or at the time of the arrest. See id. at 583, 641 A.2d 734. Pursuant to the PSA, the only factor in determining whether the information must be released to the public is whether the information was provided to the newspaper or the television station, whether the newspaper or television station was a member of the public, and whether the information was provided at least twenty-four hours before the arrest. In Konopka, we concluded that the potential for police leaks was not a sufficient reason to strip the arrestee's Fourth Amendment protection. Id. at 586, 641 A.2d 734. Moreover, given that the statute provided procedural protections for the release of the arrestee's identity, we concluded that the statute was not too imprecise. Id. at 587, 641 A.2d 734. Based on the reasoning in Konopka, we likewise conclude that, in the case at hand, the potential for police leaks is not a sufficient reason to strip the Theory for the polarization of surface plasmon polaritons. We provide a systematic and compact description of the polarization properties of surface plasmon polaritons (SPPs). For metallic films the SPP electric field is parallel or antiparallel to the major face of the film, while the magnetic field is directed along the minor face. The SPP mode is circularly polarized in the P polarization, but both the P and S polarizations couple to the mode via the transverse magnetic (TM) and transverse electric (TE) waves. The coupling strengths of the TE and TM modes have opposite signs. In addition, the S component vanishes for P excitation, while the P component does for S excitation. These features are attributed to the symmetry properties of the surface electromagnetic field of a metal film, which allows us to describe the coupling strengths of the two polarizations as a product of a dipole factor and a factor that captures the asymmetric symmetry properties. The results are confirmed by the simple geometry of the real and the imaginary parts of the SPP wave vectors.Twitter on Monday announced new policies to crack down on abuse of the social media site, including the removal of entire user accounts and the suspending of entire groups of users for life. The changes, outlined in a blog post by CEO Dick Costolo, are meant to serve as a message to users and "proactively reducing abusive behavior on Twitter" and are the first of many in what Costolo promises will be an ongoing effort to change the service's culture. "We see it as a responsibility to do what we can to reduce the toxicity on our service. Like other platforms and services, our own culture and norms are an issue here, so we have to be diligent and thoughtful in ensuring we are providing a positive environment for all people, not just a few," he wrote. "This is the priority for our team at Twitter, and as we implement these changes, we will continue to work with outside experts to listen to the community, learn and evolve as we go." Most of the changes announced Monday focus on blocking and removing accounts that fall into categories of real-time abuse, like users who use Twitter to spread violence, harassment or abusive content. Another category involves accounts that are compromised to spread malware or launch attacks against other users, an issue that Costolo noted has been a problem on Twitter "for some time." One of the most visible actions Twitter has taken over the past few years has been in
