Im particularly fond of the third game in the series because that was when the series started to grow into a proper franchise. My first play-through was set four years into the future, with the player now working for a grumpy billionaire who is looking for the answer to one last riddle. The game begins on the passenger deck of a spaceship hurtling through space when the crew is interrupted by an enormous, white, laser-like orb speeding into the ship. It hits a man, killing him instantly, and then fires a bolt into the computer, destroying it. The orb then touches the computers controls, and locks the crew in their quarters. With the ship approaching the Earth, the captain must find the answer to the riddle before the ship hits the atmosphere. It doesnt take long to realise that things arent going to be quite as simple as they seem, but the rest of the game is a fun ride. The characters are really well-developed, and the plot is tight and perfectly-paced. A big difference from previous games is the introduction of a multiplayer aspect. You can play the game offline, but up to four people can play together online, and you can now play the game on two monitors at once, with one displaying your spaceship and the other showing the action on the other ships. The game also marks the introduction of two characters that would go on to become two of gaming?s most iconic sidekicks: Bell, who is a diamond-in-the-rough with just a few lines of dialog, and the pink, fur-covered cat-thing Gary who happens to be that game?s lead character.
